ABSTRACT

A computer-implemented method of storing data in a first database includes receiving data inputted in a data entry format by a user through a user interface, transforming the data from the data entry format to a first data storage format, and storing the data in the first

5   database in the first data storage format.

20744154.doc